USING RUBBISH

TO CHANGE THE WORLD

When people think of rubbish, images of thrown away items usually come to mind. However, for one artist, rubbish is seen as art which can be used to send a very powerful message to the world.

An art gallery is definitely a place of wonder for those who admire interesting pieces of art.

1) _____ crowds of people make their way inside, they can't help but notice what is displayed right there in front of them – beautiful and unique artwork that they have never seen before. In fact, the artwork of London-based artist Michelle Reader, is just that. She uses her talent to create things such as figures of people and sculptures of animals, plants and flowers. What makes her artwork very special and different from others, though, is that they are each made 2) _____ waste materials. She uses everything from plastic bottles and newspapers to juice cartons and aluminium cans. She even uses shopping lists and birthday cards that have been thrown 3) _____ too.

She hopes that by creating pieces of art from rubbish she can 4) _____ awareness about the problems the environment is facing – one being the huge amount of rubbish there is on our planet. Reader's artwork can be seen at one of the many workshops she hosts at schools, galleries and festivals. What is more, she makes pieces of art for different theatres as well. Artists like Michelle Reader make the world a better place because they use their artwork for a good reason. As the famous painter Edgar Degas once said, "Art is not what you see, but what you make others see", 5) _____ is exactly what Michelle Reader tries to do with each piece of art.
